The Sydney Morning Herald.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1867.

In the Assembly, yesterday.

Ministers, in answer to questions, said: that a return of the number and cost of the Gold Excise would be laid on the table to-day evening; that the amount voted for a Free Public Library had been found insufficient, and in the present financial state of the colony it was not thought expedient to ask for any further grant; the petition from Port Macquarie respecting the road between that port and Ararat would be considered in connection with the next road schedule; that there was no true road between New England and the Manning, and a sum of money would be voted for the road between New England and the Manning; that the proceedings in the case of the Attorney-General v. Elliott and others had been taken only formally in the name of the Attorney-General; that the letters in the case of Eckhart v. Eckhart were read out by a clerk to the reporters of the papers and that the Attorney-General would direct that the practice of furnishing the Press with deposits, &c., should be discontinued; that the plans for improving Public roads were in preparation, when completed the work would be undertaken; and that it did not appear to the Attorney-General that the case of Yates for throwing a corrosive liquid over a young woman was of such a character as to warrant its introduction.

On the motion of Mr. THORNTON, the papers relating to the disputed water right between Mr. Grain and Deering were ordered to be laid on the table.

On the motion of Mr. FURNER, copies of all school bills submitted by the various school boards for use in Public Schools were ordered to be laid on the table.

A bill to amend the District Courts Act of 1858 was brought in by Mr. WINDSHYAM, and was read a first time.

On the motion of Mr. PHILLIPS, it was ordered that the House should go into committee on Friday next to consider the propriety of introducing a bill to prohibit the use of intoxicating liquors to Australian aborigines.

Mr. ROBIN moved that the gold export duty be abolished, and ought to be abolished. The House has shown itself favourable to the repeal of this duty by last year passing a bill, which the other House has thrown out. The Government was willing to introduce a similar bill this session, but would not enter into arguments to support his motion.

Mr. EAGAR advised the withdrawal of the motion, promising at once to give notice of a bill to repeal the duty.

Mr. FORSTER objected to the withdrawal. Mr. EAGAR moved the previous question.

After some remarks from Mr. GARRATT, the motion was disposed of by the previous question being carried in the negative.

Mr. EAGAR gave notice that he would to-day move the House into committee, to consider the advisability of introducing a bill to repeal the Gold Excise Duty.

Mr. JOHNSON moved for a Select Committee to enquire into the claim of George M. Leed, a Bradford, for compensation for a seizure of spirits, &c., made on his premises by a constable Carroll.

Mr. Leed had purchased the spirits, &c., in the insolvent estate of one Jacobs, who held a wholesale spirit license, and imagined he could sell under that license. Carroll seized the stock, but was repaid by the Colonial Secretary, and was made to return the goods taken. The claim now made by Leed for loss of sale and damage.

Mr. EAGAR made no objection to the motion, which was put and carried.

Mr. SUTHERLAND moved the House into committee on Tuesday next to consider the claim of the Municipal Council of Paddington to the amount of £250 15s. 7d., for endowment withheld by the Government because certain necessary returns had not been sent in.

He explained that the delay had arisen through a misunderstanding which had occurred between the chairman and the auditor.

The Government making no objection, the motion was put and carried.

The House adjourned at fourteen minutes to 3 o'clock on Wednesday.

The great item of the news is one which will surprise few, though many may regret it. The Roman question, so long the perplexity of diplomatists, and an anxiety to ecclesiastics, seems at last to be referred to the chances of insurrectionary warfare. The Emperor NAPOLEON has been undoubtedly sincere in his desire to preserve the independence of the present Pope. He could have no interest in any other policy. Nor is there any reason for supposing that the Italian Government has been over-anxious to expedite what it regards as manifest destiny. It would have been content to wait till the year was ripe enough to drop unlooked, and it is certainly bound by most explicit agreements not to act openly or to manoeuvre secretly, for the downfall of what remains of the territorial power of the Pope. But outside the Governments, and untrammelled by treaties, is a power which perplexes cabinets and ignores conventions. This irrepressible GABRIELLI, the king extraordinary, who refuses to wait the slow development of diplomatic schemes, and presses forward impatiently to the realisation of the great Italian dream. GABRIELLI knows nothing of expediency and makes no account of hindrances. He has the sublime faith of an ardent enthusiast, and has already accomplished so much in defiance of all probabilities, and in the teeth of Napoleonic diplomacy, that there is nothing wonderful in his not being restrained or overawed by the solemn negotiations of Courts. In spite of the professed reluctance of his own Sovereign, and the unconcealed dislike of the French Emperor, he made VICTOR EMANUEL a present of the island of Sicily and the southern half of Italy, and he now wishes to complete the work then left unfinished by adding the City of Rome to this donation—the most extraordinary ever given by a subject to his Sovereign. Individually, of course, he could do nothing, but his power lies in the fact that he expresses the wish of the majority of his countrymen, who chafe at the restraints imposed on the regular Government. Notwithstanding the religious sympathy with the person and office of the Pope—notwithstanding the strong feeling among conservative classes in favour of established authority, and the territorial independence of the Head of the vast Roman Catholic Church—there is an uncontrollable yearning to have Rome, with all its imperial associations, as part of the Italian Kingdom. The people, if they cannot give GABRIELLI active assistance, give him all their sympathy. He himself has been arrested, and is a prisoner in his island home, but he has set the movement going, and he is able to sustain itself. The Italian Government, though disowning responsibility for the insurrection, and abstaining from direct interference, seems inclined also to resist the interference of France. The French fleet is already at Toulon to salute the Pope's assistance, but its departure is arrested by the Italian threat that the action of the fleet would be followed by the march of Italian troops across French and Italian forces. Any collision between French and Italian forces might instantly light up a European war, for the tinder is very dry, and a spark may set it in a flame.

Such a war NAPOLEON seems anxious to prevent, or at least to postpone, though the French people have been once more irritated by a despatch of BISMARCK's intended as a counter stroke to the imperial conference at Salzburg.

This despatch appears to be antagonistic to the Franco-Austrian idea of a South-German Confederation, and, by ostentatiously declaring the liberty of the States south of the Main to choose their own destiny, forebodes the realisation of that idea as alarming to the French mind, of a union of all Germany, under Prussian leadership. The irritation caused in France by such suggestions, and such checks to French diplomacy, makes it increasingly difficult for NAPOLEON to keep his high-spirited subjects contented with peace. Lord STANLEY, one of the coolest and most unimpassioned of contemporary politicians, admits that continental politics are in a very precarious condition, and the most reassuring thing he can say is merely to hope that good sense may prevail.

He entertains a similar hope as to the soothing effect of time and calm consideration on the other side of the Atlantic, and expresses confidence that the excitable feelings of our American cousins will ultimately subside into a more friendly tone.

The internal quiet of England has been again disturbed by an outbreak of Fenian zeal and folly. The scene of the outrage was the city of Manchester—a city swarming with an Irish population, but very unlikely to become the headquarters of an Irish Republic. Thus a peaceful English town should be selected for an exhibition of Fenianism only shows the wild and purposeless fatuity of these misguided zealots. A secret, sudden, and organised rising might of course have a momentary success, and do some havoc both to property and life. But a little sweet revenge in that way is all that could come out of such a movement. Ultimate success is out of the question. Purposeless and mischievous raids only help to degrade the cause of the insurgents, and to destroy any particle of sympathy with them.

The Abyssinian expedition has started. It is an unpleasant, troublesome, and expensive business. But it seems unavoidable, if British subjects, innocent of any crime, are to be protected, and the consular dignity is to be respected. It is difficult to regulate the intercourse of civilised and uncivilised communities without the introduction of force to smooth down difficulties.

The wool market is steady for good qualities, but inferior samples have had to submit to a decline. The disturbed state of continental affairs has somewhat excited the money market, especially on the Continent. But money is still plentiful, and discount has not yet rebounded above one per cent.

We have always done our utmost to enforce the importance of keeping faith with the public creditor. We preferred even the ad valorem duties, with all the peril to our trade which they portended, to the doubt of meeting our obligations in the London money market. We believe that mischievous as has been the result of these duties—and certainly they have not been less so than we expected—it is small compared with what our prospects would have been had any sign of repudiation or insolvency attached to our names. Thus, in proportion as we are distinctly assured that the ad valorem duties were the only alternative at the last moment to sustain the public credit is our disposition to extenuate the adoption of that system, so full of evil, but which was intended to be only temporary. It is clearly impossible that the proceeds of the ordinary revenue, if these duties be abolished, can supply the public wants unless our system of expenditure undergo an organic change.

New taxation we must have, but the question is—in what form? Shall it be collected in harmony with the principles of British municipal law, or go only to swell the purse of the central Government, with all the evil that must attend upon the increase of power which such a policy implies?

Why should the people of New South Wales refuse to assume the duties, the privileges, and the charge accepted by all other members of the family and race to which we belong? There is no spot in America having anything like population, that does not at once adopt municipal law. There is not a district or town or county in Great Britain that has not its local taxation, and with it the burdens which these interests impose. In the neighbouring colonies of Tasmania, and afterwards in Victoria—interests purely local have been confided to persons chosen from the residents, and representing their views and opinions. What reason, then, can there be for refusing to extend the same system to the greater part of this territory, and imparting power to confer—as population may develop—upon any place the same rights and the same duties? We know of none but the peculiar apathy of our population; the long-confirmed habit of looking to Government for everything; the desire to convert the Legislative Assembly into a mart of barter and sale, under the wretched idea that the only business of a member is to support a Government that will do most for his immediate constituents. Everyone must see how this entirely corrupts the office of a representative regarding the whole community and acting for the great body of the people. He becomes a mere delegate; a haggler for pence; a schemer, sneaking behind the chair of the SPEAKER in order to get from the Ministers some signal of acquiescence in a private speculation; a waiter upon departments, always found hovering about the public offices, and between threats and cajoling, endeavouring to obtain something which ought not to be granted, but which is bestowed in order to secure what ought not to be given. The whole plan of government is thus corrupted, and the independent member, who resolves to maintain his opinion against the local demands of his constituency, will probably find himself rejected at the next election, even if he has the eloquence of Lord CHATHAM. What do people who have been so trained and habituated care for the benefactions of the party in power? They care for nothing save the accomplishment of their objects. If the operation of this Parliamentary course were thoroughly disclosed—if it were possible to trace the roads that have been formed, and the bridges that have been built—the manner in which grants of money have been expended, and unavowed advantages conferred upon members of the House as the reward of their subservience—we should perhaps be a little more wary of the system than we are. There is great danger that indulgence in a plan of Government so corrupt should be punished by the prostration of all moral sense in the people, and that they should come to regard that as normal and right which in its inception is looked upon with disgust, and confessed only with circumspection and some degree of shame.

The present Ministers, like their predecessors, have promised a municipal scheme. Some progress has been made towards it. As far as it has gone it has been a success. The repugnance originally felt to its introduction has subsided, and the realised benefits have been so clear and indisputable that opposition has

We know of none but the peculiar apathy of our population; the long-confirmed habit of looking to Government for everything; the desire to convert the Legislative Assembly into a mart of barter and sale, under the wretched idea that the only business of a member is to support a Government that will do most for his immediate constituents. Everyone must see how this entirely corrupts the office of a representative regarding the whole community and acting for the great body of the people. He becomes a mere delegate; a haggler for pence; a schemer, sneaking behind the chair of the SPEAKER in order to get from the Ministers some signal of acquiescence in a private speculation; a waiter upon departments, always found hovering about the public offices, and between threats and cajoling, endeavouring to obtain something which ought not to be granted, but which is bestowed in order to secure what ought not to be given. The whole plan of government is thus corrupted, and the independent member, who resolves to maintain his opinion against the local demands of his constituency, will probably find himself rejected

CONTINENTAL.

FRANCE.

PARIS, SEPTEMBER 21ST, EVENING.

La France of this evening, commenting upon the recent circular of Bismarck to the Prussian diplomatic agents abroad, says it is not France who provokes the national susceptibility of Germany—it is Prussia who provokes the susceptibilities of France. Prussia's policy is irritating; in this she is wrong; the French people are not over exacting towards a vanquished enemy, and do not like any other nation to be exacting towards them, especially when it has had neither opportunity nor honour in vanquishing them.

PARIS, SEPTEMBER 24.

A telegram was received from Florence, dated yesterday, announcing that Garibaldi left Arezzo on Sunday. His whereabouts is not known. A telegram received this morning adds that he had gone to the Papal frontiers. Great excitement prevailed in Florence, and orders were sent to different quarters to effect his arrest.

Great animation reigns at Toulon in consequence of the news from Italy. Contradictory rumours are in circulation there—according to some there was a question of sending a squadron of evolution to watch the Roman coast, and orders for its departure are shortly to be sent to Ajaccio, where Admiral Gueydon is stationed.

The Minister of War is shortly expected to arrive at Toulon; every arrangement is making for embarking troops if necessary; the Patrie adds:—"It is impossible either to affirm or deny these statements, but it is certain that several ships are ready to sail, and the transport Intrepid has received orders to arm immediately."

PARIS, SEPTEMBER 25.

Le Press of this evening says rumours of Ministerial changes are in circulation. Counts Paerigny and Wallewski have been summoned by the Emperor to Biarritz. The name of M. Drouyn Le Huys is also mentioned. It is also, moreover, asserted that M. Hausmann has obtained leave of absence for one month, and it is added that he will return to Paris either as a Minister or as a private individual. Le Press adds that it is not in a position to confirm these rumours.

THE PAPAL STATES.

ROME, 20TH SEPTEMBER.

At a Consistory held this morning, a speech was delivered by the Pope. His Holiness solemnly condemned the recent decree of the Italian Government for consummating the sacrifice of the ecclesiastical property. He declared the decree to be null and void, and confirmed the censures already launched against the usurpers. He then proceeded to point out the calumnies contained in a pamphlet recently published in Paris, entitled "The Roman Court and the Emperor Maximilian."

NORTH GERMAN PARLIAMENT.

BERLIN, SEPTEMBER 22ND, EVENING.

The Conservative, Free, and Conservative National parties in the North German Parliament agreed to insert the following passage in the address in reply to the speech from the Throne:—"We, on our part, can only consider the great task completed when the entry of the Southern States into the Confederation takes place, according to article 79 of the Federal Constitution."

ITALY.

FLORENCE, SEPTEMBER 21ST, EVENING.

The Government made public the following declaration:—"The Ministry have carefully watched up to the present time the great agitation which, under the glorious name of Rome, is trying to force the country to violate international stipulations, consecrated by the vote of Parliament, and the honour of the nation. The Ministry regret the injury which such agitation would do to the tranquillity of the State, and the public credit and financial operations, on which depend the well being and fortune of the country up to the present time. The Ministry respected the rights of all citizens; but now, contrary to those rights, certain persons would proceed to threats. The Ministry feel it their duty to preserve inviolate public confidence, and the sovereignty of the law—the Government will remain faithful to, and thoroughly carry out the declaration laid before and accepted by Parliament in a free State. No citizen can rise above law or substitute himself in place of the high powers of the nation, and disturb by violent means the organization of the country and lead her into the gravest complications. The Ministry has confidence in the wisdom and love of country of Italians, but if any one should fail in loyalty towards their national stipulations, and should attempt to violate that frontier for which we have passed our word, the Ministry will not permit such an act, and will place on those persons contravening this order the responsibility of whatever acts they may provoke."

FLORENCE, SEPTEMBER 23.

Fresh troops have been dispatched to the Papal frontier. Advice from Rome announces that the Roman police are making many arrests. The greater part of the Pontifical troops, with the exception of the garrisons of Viterbo and Civita Vecchia, are concentrated at Rome. Several chests, containing 300 rifles, and directed to Prussia, were seized at the Florence railway station to-day.

BERLIN, SEPTEMBER 23.

A Royal decree has been promulgated to-day dissolving the Prussian Chamber, preceded by a report signed by the whole of the Ministry proposing and explaining reasons for the measure.
